Wikirating, Weiss Ratings and Baserank join forces to support independent crypto ratings

Zurich (CH)/Palm Beach Gardens (USA)/Prague (CZ), January 11th 2021

Wikirating has today joined forces with Weiss Ratings and Baserank in a strategic alliance to support independent and reliable ratings for Bitcoin and hundreds of other digital assets.

Starting now, all digital coins and tokens covered by Weiss Crypto Ratings and Baserank are also available and regularly updated on Wikirating. Plus, for easy comparison by investors across ratings agencies and asset classes, including stocks and bonds, the grade scale of each crypto ratings firm is mapped to a common standard (AAA to D).

“We believe that, for a lasting adoption of crypto-based assets, it is crucial to have independent and trustworthy sources for their appropriate evaluation – and Wikirating can ensure this” says Dorian Credé, chairman of Wikirating.

“This is a major breakthrough for the industry,” said Dr. Martin D. Weiss, Founder of Weiss Ratings. “For the first time, digital and traditional asset investors all over the world will have a single access point for independent crypto ratings – all with a common standard that cuts through the hype and is free from conflicts of interest.”

“Baserank is able to provide crowd-based ratings of hundreds of cryptoassets, from Bitcoin and Ethereum to recently released cryptoassets like Uniswap token (UNI). We are very pleased that Wikirating has identified Baserank as one of the first reliable crypto rating firms and includes our ratings now,” adds Ondřej Pilný, CEO and co-founder of Baserank.

Wikirating starts with 244 cryptocurrencies/tokens (which includes the top 100 ones by market cap, as of December 2020) and will continuously expand the list.
